RACE REPORT: 2012 WORLD SS

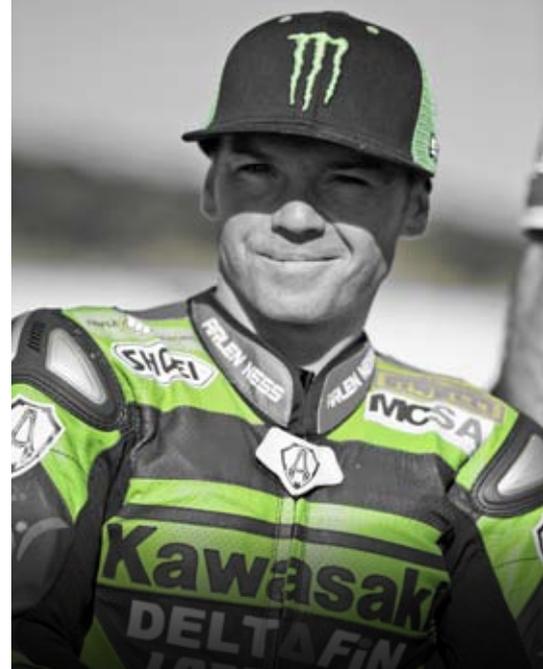

DONINGTON:

Having come straight from Monza I was always going to be a bit stiff and sore for Donington Park and man was I. The first free practice seemed to be a complete waste as my right calf was killing me and I ended up on BBC 2 way back in 20th spot. I spent a few hours in the mobile clinic afterwards and they were confident that their "panelbeating" would work. It did and I ended up with P8 for qualifying.

The second free practice we worked on our race simulation again and it seemed good excepting for me getting extremely tired. My right leg had no power to push after only 5 laps so for the rest of the 22 lap simulation I was only using my right arm to get myself out of the turns and found myself really man handling the bike. Again the clinic worked on me for hours and on both my right leg and arm as my arm was now destroyed from the over compensation. It was a bit better for qualifying where I ended up with P6. I was happy because I set this lap time on my final lap when I was again tired and my ideal lap time would have put me in P3.

The start had me boxed in between a few Honda's and I was back in P10 on lap 1. I wasn't too stressed as I knew it was a long race but I needed to get moving for that podium. I wasted too much time fighting my way up to 6th place and when I got there I stayed there to finish with a solid result and nice hard race.
